Encore—Connecting Arts, Culture and Community.

Encore Media Group acknowledges that we are on the lands of the Duwamish People, and their other Coast Salish relations—past and present. We recognize that these lands are unceded and we support the Duwamish Tribe in their struggle to gain Federal Tribal Recognition. We honor with gratitude the land itself. This acknowledgement does not take the place of authentic relationships with Indigenous communities, which we seek to build. We hope that this step of honoring these lands, and the First People of Seattle who remain their stewards, will help us become better neighbors to the Duwamish Tribe and all the people who have called the Pacific Northwest home since time immemorial.

For Our Patrons

Land Acknowledgement
Seattle Rep acknowledges that we are on the traditional land of the Coast Salish people, including the Duwamish People past and present. In this role, Jeff oversees all the administrative functions of this $15 million, nationally-recognized, not-for-profit performing arts organization, including development, finance, marketing, operations, and Board relations. Since his arrival—which coincided, to the day, with Braden Abraham's appointment as Artistic Director—activity, attendance, fundraising, and the budget have all shown marked increases. Under their management, the theater also recently completed a significant renovation of the PONCHO Forum, the first major capital project undertaken by Seattle Rep since the construction of the Leo K. Theater in 1995; saw its world premiere of Come From Away open on Broadway and launch North American and international tours; reconfigured the Bagley Wright Theater in order to produce David Byrne's groundbreaking, immersive musical Here Lies Love, which now stands as the highest-grossing show in Seattle Rep's history; has committed to an initiative to increase equity, diversity, and inclusion at every level of the theater; and completed its first strategic plan in more than a decade. Prior to his arrival in Seattle, Jeff served as Managing Director of Washington D.C.'s Woolly Mammoth Theatre Company for seven seasons. Before that, Jeff served as Producing Director at Perseverance Theatre in Juneau, AK for eight seasons. Jeff started his career in arts administration with the Albany Berkshire Ballet in Pittsfield, MA, where he served as Managing Director for three years. PNB Peter Boal ARTISTIC DIRECTOR

From the Artistic Director

Dear Friends,

I see my neighbors a lot more than I used to. While walking their dog or out in the yard raking leaves, they stop to ask me, is the theater OK? Are you OK? When I assure them the theater is coming back, their follow-up question is often: what have you been doing during this time? Almost two years into the pandemic, it now seems hard to remember. We've been very busy even without productions happening, but most of the work is planning for a constantly shifting situation, so there's very little to show in terms of events that mark time. Theater happens in the moment, but for that to occur, we need to plan four to six to twelve months in advance. We've made dozens of plans on how to get back on stage safely, and how to stay connected to all of you and the artists who are so essential to our mission and vision. A lot of these plans did not pan out, but other ideas took us in new directions and reconnected us to the theater as an experiment in exciting new ways.

This was a grand experiment, and after so much disruption, a return to something familiar in an unfamiliar setting.

One experiment I'm proud of is this filmed production of The Winter's Tale. Originally set to open in September 2020, we were determined to kick off our season with The Winter's Tale this year, even though safely producing a play involving dozens of participants during a pandemic was a daunting task. Film became part of the solution. Through film we could create a work of scale, gathering smaller groups of people and assembling all the pieces in the editing room. We could film outside. We could work out of sequence if necessary. So, for a brief time, a theater company became a film company. The stage became a soundstage. There was something poetic about the cityscape becoming the backdrop for a Seattle Rep Public Works production—a theater event that celebrates our city, bringing together professional theater makers, partner organizations, and a community ensemble of over fifty people. There's nothing quite like a Public Works production when the stage fills with the ensemble singing, and the whole audience becomes electrified by their voices. It's nearly impossible to translate that experience to the screen, but I think what you're about to see resonates in a different way. Here is your community making a play together after so many months in isolation.

I visited the set of The Winter's Tale during filming. It was mid-September 2021 and I found the cast and crew gathered behind the Exhibition Hall in a little bucolic area I had walked past hundreds of times but never really noticed. The set pieces and actors in costume told me we were in Bohemia, and the late summer blooms and sun-tinted leaves made for the perfect backdrop. Director and screen adaptor Desdemona Chiang and her team were making their way through the crowd, setting the scene with each cluster of actors. Derek Edamura, who has documented every Public Works production, had adapted to the new setting as cinematographer. His camera was strapped to him as he practiced a tracking shot. Instead of hoisting fly lines, our stage crew was there holding cameras and lighting equipment—many of whom I had not seen in over a year. The setting was different than what we were used to, but there we were, making a play and capturing it with a camera, while passersby wandering the Center grounds stopped to watch. This was a grand experiment, and after so much disruption, a return to something familiar in an unfamiliar setting.

The Winter's Tale is a romance. Its themes are of reunification and rebirth. Love and hope run deeper because they come with an understanding of loss. We are thrilled you are here to join us for this screening, since the one critical element we've been missing for this whole process is all of you. The best part of any plan is seeing it come to fruition, and with the creation of The Winter's Tale and the gathering of all of us to enjoy it together, I can finally say: we are back.

Deepening Connections from Stage to Screen

Alexandra Tavares in The Winter's Tale.

Seattle Rep: What has it been like creating in-person art again during the pandemic?

Derek Edamura (Director of Photography & Film Editor): It has been incredible. To be collaborating with such an amazing creative team, to be back behind the camera, and to be capturing these performances has been such an incredible experience after persevering through such a turbulent time.

Inji Kamel (Director of Public Works): It was so exciting to see people coming in for rehearsal. Friends I hadn't seen in 18 months except for over Zoom were right there in front of me! The hardest part was not actually hugging each other, so we came up with a bunch of different ways to greet one another from elbow bumps to curtsies. You could tell everyone was grinning from ear to ear under their masks.

Robert J. Aguilar (Lighting Designer): Learning to work again at the level expected of Seattle Rep has been a challenge for everyone. What we do takes a lot of time, dedication, and craft. Not being able to flex those muscles during the pandemic was hard and not all of us made it. Being back feels wonderful though, seeing our stages come back to life and knowing what the future has in store for us is a complete thrill!

Derek Edamura on the set of The Winter's Tale.

SR: How did this hybrid theater/film concept come to be? How has it been different than other art forms you've worked on?

IK: We had planned on doing the show onstage before the stay-at-home order. When we had a better sense of what was needed to navigate this new paradigm, we thought that creating a film would be the safest way to do something in person. It was important to us that the filmed production still be rooted in the theatrical and I think that concept really spoke to Desdemona.

Desdemona Chiang (Director): This has been my first time working on anything that is totally on screen. I'm a stage director by trade so I work with bodies and space in real time, continuously from top to bottom. I don't yell "action" and "cut." I don't do things out of sequence other than rehearse, and we don't ever perform out of sequence.

RJA: There are many applicable skills and lines of common understanding between the theater and film world. As a lighting designer my skills and training come into play. I'm still driving a story forward with light, but the frame of reference is whatever the camera is capturing, so constant coordination with Derek was key to a successful collaboration.

DE: The Winter's Tale has been a beautiful blend of these two art forms, film and theater. What I think is unique about this project is that we had to be so incredibly flexible and efficient with the filming of this project, and we really embraced what each of the mediums does well and adapted them to fit the strengths of the other.

Varinique 'V' Davis and the cast of The Winter's Tale in rehearsal.

SR: How has the Public Works sense of community persevered through COVID protocols, distancing, etc.?

DE: What I tried to do, as a practice, was continue having conversations with individuals during the rehearsal process and throughout filming. What I have always loved about Public Works is the relationships that are developed throughout the process of creating theater, and I really wanted to recapture that experience because I have missed it during the pandemic. I spent as much time as possible checking in with people and seeing how they are doing. It made me feel deeply connected to the community in a way I haven't felt before.

RJA: Seeing so many of the same folks that we've had in our building year after year was such a gift. To hear their voices lift in song or break out in laughter was just a perfect reminder of why we do this work. The connections that we've forged with everyone, some over years and some new, are something that no fabric barrier or social distance can interfere with.

IK: It's a scary time. The effects of COVID are real and have impacted each one of us in very real ways. I would say the sense of community persevered BECAUSE of the protocols and distancing. We are already a community that has built trust together, and even those who are new to the process know right away what we're about, so they know that we want everyone to show up with what they need. What we need right now is safety and a healthy environment, and our COVID safety team did an incredible job of ensuring everyone was safe.

DC: I think it was hard for folks to not hug each other. Lia [Sima Fakhouri, Public Works Manager] and Inji organized some "fun-tivities," like leaving notes for each other and having a "found gift exchange." There was an acute awareness of how different this process was going to be for folks, so we did anything we could to create a feeling of family.

SR: How is the story of The Winter's Tale still relevant today?

DC: The play is about reconciliation, about healing and coming together; the lessons you learn through loss, and how is one deserving of forgiveness and being whole. The Winter's Tale is so big – it hits all the notes! It's tragedy, then comedy, then sweeping romance. Coming out of a global pandemic full of trauma and stress and uncertainty to find some relief, I think, is very appropriate for this moment.

SR: What do you hope audiences will take away from The Winter's Tale?

DE: A deep understanding of how much joy and love went into making it. Everyone brought their skills and expertise to the table every day and this project would not have been possible without the amazing work of everyone in this community.

RJA: I hope audiences can see that the living, breathing heart of Seattle Rep is most on display through our Public Works program. It's a very clear example of us dedicating our time, resources, and immense talents to something greater than ourselves. I hope our audience watches The Winter's Tale and sees themselves and their values reflected back.
